Mumbai Borivali City

Borivali is a suburb in N W Mumbai with over a million inhabitants. It is famed as the "Suburb of Gardens" with gardens at almost every block. Some of its many gardens include the Veer Savarkar Udayan and Jhansi Ki Rani. There are also two rivers passing through Borivali; the Dahisar river & Poinzur river.

The name comes from the bushes of sweet fruit named "bor" found in the area. The original residents in Borivali are from the tribals and the East Indians who lived on the land with occasional fishing. With the land price rising between Bandra and Churchgate, there was a huge influx of people in the 19th century. Borivali is home to several villages which still hold their old charm but are slowly giving way to the concrete jungle.

The Sanjay Gandhi National Park in the eastern section of Borivali has a few leopards and a 4th-century BCE archaeological site called Kanheri Caves. This area holds the world record for being the only forest surrounded by cities and still protected. It has three huge statues of Jain Tirthankar Lord Adinath and his two sons Bharat and Bahubali. Borivali is also home to the Mandapeshwar Caves in its west. A tunnel used to pass from Vasai Fort through Borivali and was said to be touching these caves.

One of the finest 'Navratri' Indian festivals, devoted and celebrated for Maa Ambe, is held at Kora Kendra Ground which is a major attraction and a well known celebration in this suburb. Prabodhankar Thackrey Auditorium schedules a variety of dramas and plays.

Gorai Creek is on the western coast of Borivali and crossing by ferry one can reach Gorai Beach on the western end of Borivali. Other attractions include Water Kingdom, Asia's largest water amusement park, the Global Pagoda built for the Vipassana Institute, Mandapeshwar Civic Federation Club near Govindnagar and Eskay Resorts near Link Road. The Temple of Sai-Dham with many Hindu deities under one roof are worshipped and Vazira Naka situated in the west is very well known for the Siddhivinayak Temple of Lord Ganesh.
